A RUSHING BUSINESS.

Proceedings of the Mayor's Court This Morning.

Mayor Blanton did a rushing business in his office in City Hall this morning. Culprits were numerous, and when court adjourned Chief Baird's pocketbook was quite plethoric from the fines assessed and paid in.

Ben Leford was the first name called. He was accused of being bilious on Saturday and promptly pleaded guilty. He was fined $5.

James I. Bruce replied to the usual question of guilty or not guilty with a curt "Correct, Judge," and $5 was marked down against his name.

Thomas Hendrick admitted his having indulged too freely, but because of his age and of his being an unfamiliar figure in the court room he was let off for $3.

Will Irwin, a mulatto, pleaded guilty to being drunk and also to having assaulted a police officer. He was fined $5.

Gus Diamond was found guilty of carrying a concealed weapon and fined $10 and costs. The prisoner is a negro and he boarded a car on Sunday evening and was drunk. When the conductor asked for his fare he exhibited his gun and a rough and tumble fight ensued. It ended in Diamond being jailed.

Ben Hall, who assaulted an old man in a saloon some time ago, was up this morning. His own testimony proved his guilt, and he was fined $3.

The Address of Welcome.

Governor Fowle has accepted the invitation and will deliver the address of welcome at the banquet to be tendered to the commissioners of the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian church in Asheville on May 15. Special rates have been secured from the railroad companies and tickets, to both visitors and commissioners, will be one-third fare.

THE LIST OF THE DEAD.

NAMES OF THE VICTIMS OF THE LOUISVILLE CYCLONE.

The First Estimates Greatly Exaggerated, But Many Smaller Towns Not Yet Heard From—The Cloud Described.

The first estimates of the results in loss of life and property of the tornado that visited Louisville on Thursday night proved to have been exaggerated, and it is now believed that not over 200 persons perished in that city.

This happy deficiency, however, there is too much reason to believe, has been made up by the work of the tornadoes which at about the same time struck scores of smaller towns and cities scattered over the lower parts of Illinois and Indiana and the western and central parts of Kentucky and Tennessee.

Through a large section of Tennessee the storm spread devastation even more extensive than the first reports indicated. The loss of life was not great in any one locality, but the aggregate for the State must be large.

Bowling Green, Ky., according to private dispatches, is safe, and was scarcely touched by the storm.

Louisville has bravely determined to bear her burden as far as possible here, and profers of assistance poured in from all over the country have been courteously declined.

Over 100 bodies have been taken from the ruins, and a number still remain in the debris of the dancing hall. Among those removed and identified are:

Rudolph Senger, Genevieve Simms, aged 4, Henry Ling, James M. Stevens, John Kiehl, Charles Siebert, — Sullivan, I. Fischer, Miss Mary Schatter, A. Struelens, Elmer E. Barnes, Annie Miles, Clarence Looser, Robert Hamilton, Mrs. John Horan, four unknown men, mounted beyond recognition, Mrs. Mary Lasson, Miss Annie Nyles, Mrs. McLaughlin, Mrs. Belle Leloff, Mrs. Peterson, Tom Puff, Sister Mary Pius, two unknown colored men, Nicholas J. Sullivan, William Diemer, Ben Chelt, Joan Emerich, Moody Davis, colored, two unknown colored women, Thaddeus Mason, C. H. Hathaway, Charles Jessenbrach, Mary Ryan, Katie McCune, Mary McGinty, Bridget Crowe, Maggie Campbell, Frank Paine, J. B. Schmidt, a small child of George W. Casaden, Park Corneli, E. R. McCue, unknown woman, Patrick Randy, Charles Jenks, unknown man killed in a street car at Tenth and Main streets, Rev. S. E. Barnwell, Police Officer White Baldwin, — McLaughlin, August Fischer, Mrs. Allen Peterson, Capt. T. Angermeier, J. B. McCollum, William Demare, Mrs. E. Hostetter, Miss Castleman, Theodore Angelmann, Peter Fuller, Leopold Falkenstein, William Sabaris, Mrs. Sichten, an unknown man.

The total insurance, it is believed, will not exceed $125,000. Of this $100,000 is life insurance. The life insurance is upon laborers and middle class people, and in small 10-cent companies, and the Knights of Honor. About $50,000 is in the Knights of Honor, and will be promptly paid by an assessment of 8 cents upon the members. The remaining $50,000 is the 10-cent-a-week company, which may break those companies, realizing only a small part to holders of policies.

The cyclone insurance amounts to only $2,000. Of this $1,000 is held by J. T. Callaghan, and $1,000 by Mattingly & Co., both liquor dealers. Their joint losses are $800. The plate glass insurance amounts to $2,000.

Although the loss is heavy, Louisville has refused any offers of outside assistance save money and will immediately begin repairing the damage done by the storm. Indianapolis raised $20,000, and telegraphed to the board of trade, Mayor Jacobs advised its acceptance, but it has not been done. At present it is thought that 400 houses were destroyed, and should rain fall within the next forty-eight hours, the loss will be nearly double what it is at present.

The cloud accompanying the tornado was described by a spectator as follows:

"The cloud approached us the gap in the Knobs, through which the Ohio flows. It was balloon-shaped, twisting an attenuated tail toward the earth. It emitted a constant fusillade of lightning, and seemed to be composed of a lurid, snake-like mass of electric currents whose lights would sometimes suddenly be extinguished for a few brief moments making an almost intolerable, horrible darkness. It was accompanied by a fearful roar, like that of a thousand trains crossing a big bridge at once. It could be seen to strike Louisville, and then with incredible rapidity, rumbling, swiftness, the mass leaped the river, changing it into white foam as it came toward the Indiana shore. It appeared to cross near the Louisville bridge, just over the Falls.

The Session Completed.

The superior court adjourned Saturday after having disposed of nearly all the cases on the calendar. The entire day Saturday was consumed in hearing motions. In the Henry-Welch case the defendants were given a judgment and the plaintiff made a motion for a new trial. The motion was denied and the plaintiff took an appeal to the supreme court.

Judgment was taken in about fifty cases during the term, and several orders for reference were made. Among the cases referred were T. S. Deaver against R. M. Deaver, referred to A. T. Summey, and Milton Harding against John Hart, referred to J. C. L. Gudgeon and J. S. McElroy.

Mrs. Clegg's Death.

Mrs. Rebecca Clegg, mother of Wm. E. Clegg, of the Evening Journal, died at her home on Broad street on Saturday night at 10 o'clock.

Mrs. Clegg has been ill for some time and came to Asheville about eighteen months ago. At first she apparently improved in health, but a few weeks ago she became worse and the end has constantly been expected.

The deceased lady was a native of Kent county, Ontario, and was born March 29, 1819. Her husband died some time ago. The remains will be taken to Detroit to-morrow and her son and daughter will accompany them.

GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

The man who tries to construct the style of his attire upon the lines laid down by the publications devoted to haberdashery or tailors' interests is going to suffer with nervous prostration before he finally makes up his mind as to just what the correct thing is. If he studies two or three of these journals his confusion will grow intense in its hopelessness. He will learn that the spring style of trousers is going to be wide and plain, and by the time he has settled that important point another journal will tell him that the only right thing to wear in trousersing will be narrower than common, with a small welt and a slight spring at the bottoms. Some of the swells, he will be told, are adopting the black tie for evening wear, but the strictly swaggers boys are wearing plain white, as of yore. (The man who wears a black tie with a dress coat is usually to be found escorting swell people to their seats in a metropolitan theatre for dollars five per week, but the haberdashery publication doesn't say so in its notes).

Regarding hats, coats and other good things prized by all men, the styles as described are also quite vague and variable. There can be but one rule that is safe to adopt by the anxious seeker after glory in the kingdom of the duds, and that rule imposes upon its follower the necessity of wearing the extreme styles possible. The fashion this spring is to be quietness, and the candidate for a place in the front ranks of the ultra-fashionable must allow this fact to be carried to its extreme manifestation.

He must, if we may rely upon the advice printed in advance in the columns of our haberdashery publications, get himself up as though he was aspiring to be the chief mate at a funeral. Over a quietly cut three-button cutaway coat, comparatively low cut, notched collar, vest, and pantaloons with a tendency to tightness, must fall a short overcoat of some dark, plain goods, made up with an eye to studious plainness of effect, and revealing a space of plain white shirt front, while below the collar will be a cravat or a white four-in-hand of black and white spacing, either the black spacing being on a white ground or vice versa. A soft crush hat or a flat crown derby, either in blacks or browns, will cover the head, and black gloves, perhaps, will show upon the hands. Thus gotten up, and with the placid, innocuous vacancy of an ideally judicious face peeping out from amid the enveloping gloom, the man who aspires to be ahead of the fashion will take the street like a mild black cloud, while the on-looker gazes in awe and involuntarily waits for the strains of some Marse to break mournfully on the air in the near vicinity.

In the meantime, however, the much talked about "average man" will continue to dress like a man, a civilian and a Christian, just as he has in the past. He will, perhaps, affect a slightly changed softness of demeanor in dress, in order to remain within sound of the sand wagon when the fashionable procession starts along the boulevard; but he will look like a man and a brother, and we shall not be ashamed to be seen walking with him on the street. His costume will suit the occasion and the wearer, and the trappings of cost in conventionality will not embarrass the mobile play of taste which will find expression in the style of his clothing, the breezy neatness of his neckwear and the easy hang of his coat. The average man will look as though he had bought his clothes, paid for them, taken them home and thoroughly conquered them before he gave them their first public airing, and had then forgotten all about them. If the worried young man who is ill at sea over the conflicting hints which he reads in his haberdashery guide will use his best judgment, his taste or that of some reliable friend, and his common sense, he will have the confidence-inspiring makeup and appearance of the average man; if he attempts to live up to all the fads and frills of an illustrious dudeman, especially if he is without improving and limiting ideas of his own, he will suffer in his pocketbook and in the fair esteem, respect and even love and trust of a grieved constituency that had once styled him friend, relative and best beloved.

HARD HEARTED THIEVES.

They Steal the Entire Wardrobe of P. C. Miller.

P. C. Miller, a guest of the Carolina house, remained in his room until 12 o'clock Sunday noon, and all because two hard hearted sneak thieves had visited him on the night before and walked away with his entire wardrobe.

The thieves were two tough looking customers and they applied for a room at the hotel early in the evening. They were accommodated but were apparently in no hurry about retiring and remained in the office talking with the other guests until after one o'clock in the morning. When everything was quiet in the house they went to Mr. Miller's room. The latter was asleep but as an extra precaution they chloroformed him, and stole everything they could find. It consisted mostly of wearing apparel. A purse containing a small amount of money was also taken, and they even took a whistle and mail pouch, the property of Sam Harman, a mail carrier who rooms with Mr. Miller, but who had not returned for the night.

The pair took the stolen goods to their room, divested themselves of their own clothing, put on the other and left the house. The theft was not discovered until morning and by that time the two had made good their escape. Two parties answering to their description were seen about the city at noon yesterday, but were not arrested, and the clerk at the Glen Rock says that the two were at the hotel early yesterday morning and asked for liquor. They were refused and threatened to make trouble, but finally left with the announcement that they were going to take the first freight train for the east.

One of the men is about six feet high, strongly built, and wears a slight moustache. The other is shorter, is clean shaven, and is no more than 19 years old.
